Public Statement Regarding the Health of Todd H. Bol

Little Free Library's Executive Director and Founder Todd H. Bol was recently diagnosed with pancreatic cancer. He is currently receiving hospice care in Minneapolis-Saint Paul, Minnesota. The Little Free Library board of directors and senior staff have developed an interim plan to provide continuity of organizational oversight. Board chair Monnie McMahon will be engaged in day-to-day management of the organization as needed. Former board chairman Brian MacKenzie and long-time business consultant to the organization Mark Alfuth are both serving as advisors.

Staff, partners, and close business associates of the organization will be informed of changes in business procedures that may affect them, but day-to-day activity is expected to be continued as usual. Todd's brother, Tony Bol, will be taking on some of Todd's public relations and other responsibilities.

The organization's staff and board express their deep appreciation to Todd for his leadership and good work and are poised to carry on his vision and legacy.

The public is invited to visit littlefreelibrary.org/todd-health for updated information and to leave a message or story for Todd and his family.
